WHEN THE PAPER SINGS: MAKARIA TURANGALÎLA ARRIVES

The word Turangalîla comes from Sanskrit and it was popularized by the french composer Olivier Messiaen in his Turangalîla-Symphonie (1946-48). It doesn't have a literal translation but it suggests something like “ the song of love and joy”.

As soon as I heard the term, I felt as if it was mine. That's why, the new collection, Makaria Turangalîla, is a hymn of love and joy knitted in paper, colors and cozy scenes from our day to day lives.

Turangalîla is love, is joy... and it is gratitude. Gratitude for being invited to the life fest. Alongside Goethe I think that “gratitude is the most beautiful flower that blooms from our heart”. Each piece is born from the admiration of the beauty of creation, from long hours in the workshop and from a heart that wants to sing its gratitude with colors.
